Nailloux is situated in the heart of the Lauragais countryside which spreads over approximately 2000 km² and across three counties: the Haute-Garonne, Tarn and Aude. It is characterized by the natural beauty of the countryside which varies according to the crops planted and the seasons. A lot of wheat is cultivated on Lauragais territory. In the past, the Lauragais was renowned for the cultivation of wood, which was a plant used to make a blue dye during the 16th century. But the real touristic highlight of the Lauragais is the Canal du Midi which crosses it completely.

Itinerary

1- In front of the Nailloux St Martins' church bell tower (15th & 16th centuries), go down the few steps leading to the War Memorial. Keep following until you reach the road below. Turn left until you get to the old Wheat Hall (19th century). Follow the road, then turn right following the sign "Saint Meen".

2- On arrival at the statue and the old wash-house of Saint Meen (19th century), Turn right and take the road which goes up. You will join the D11 where you turn right; take time to appreciate the view of Nailloux village. Follow the D43H, a pretty hilltop road from where you can admire the whole of the Pyrenean chain of mountains. After 2.6km you will reach the crossroads of the big departmental road (D622). Turn right into the carpark. Try to find the hidden well in the undergrowth!

3- In the middle of the carpark, take the little road on your right which follows the stream called "d'En Toulouse". After having crossed two little foot bridges, continue further along the path. Turn left to start the climb up. 50m after the bend which takes you back to the Wheat Hall, to the left take the wooden log step up. Cross carefully the road, and go up the steps from where you started the walk.
